If you have used any other type of graphic design program, Photoshop is not that much different. The basics of the Adobe Creative Suite are the same whether you are designing for a newspaper, a magazine, a personal blog, or an advertisement. In this chapter, I show you how to get a feel for Photoshop in a short tutorial that takes you from the initial setup of the application to basic photo editing and web design techniques. Photoshop is a complex program, so I outline some of the more difficult areas and provide some tools to make this type of editing a bit easier to grasp. Designing for Print Print design is similar to web design in that the basic elements are the same, but there are still some differences in how you create a print project versus a web project. When you design a print project, you need to know the print size of the final product. For example, a 6-by-9-inch print might be considered "large," as in the size of the actual physical print, whereas a 4-by-6-inch print is called a "small" print. * * * Web design and print design overlap Web design usually consists of creating websites and web pages. However, it's not uncommon to see print design work created for the web, because you can easily generate different print versions of a website by changing the "CSS," or cascading style sheet, in a web design program. If you understand the basics of print design, you can use some of the same elements and principles in a web design project. In addition to web design, print design is no longer required to generate a business card or flyer. Instead, you can easily design a business card in Photoshop for free. * * * Designing a Photo Book Some people use Photoshop as a photo book. It can be an amazing way to organize a massive amount of image data into a book that you can use to display and share your photos with family and friends. This process is actually extremely similar to creating a photo montage on a web page. Photoshop is an excellent tool for creating a book with a cover, spine, and inner pages. Each page in a book is a separate file with space to add content, images, and text. You can create a book of pages, add a cover, and then merge the pages into the cover and spine page. The covers I create are just a small selection

Q: How to submit JSF forms without command buttons I have several JSF forms in my application. I have noticed that when I click on a form the page reloads and I lose the session. When I use a command button to submit the form the page does not reload and the session is maintained. Are there any ways of submitting JSF forms in a hidden way? I have no control over the form code. The code is generated using enunciate. A: This is the default behaviour, unless you've specified some other behaviour in faces-config.xml. The reason is that you're posting a form back to the server instead of being redirected to a result page, which otherwise would happen. You can change that behaviour with the style. The invention relates to an apparatus for the continuous production of containers, in particular of bottles, from glass, comprising a container maker, a separating means, a transfer system and a blank delivery device. EP-B1-0 130 455 describes a method and apparatus for the continuous production of glass containers wherein the blank body is first brought to a cleaning station and then to an oven station, where it is heated to a high temperature and subsequently is cooled and then guided to one or more container makers. The drawing up of the blank bodies, necessary for the production of the containers, takes place when the blank bodies are still hot, in particular by means of a suction tube which guides the blank bodies into the required container makers. This makes it necessary to build a high-temperature reservoir and a separate suction system as well as to convey the blank bodies through a temperature zone. EP-A1-0 351 959 also describes a method for the production of individual glass bottles wherein the blank body is drawn up and then moved into the container. For this purpose the bottle to be produced, after the blank body has been cleaned, is separated from the blister, which remains connected to the blank body, by means of a pinch roller. This represents a disadvantage, in particular with larger volumes, since the blister must be converted into the bottle while it is still hot. In order to create conditions which are as close as possible to the production conditions, the apparatus according to DE-A2-32 23 879 is used in which a container maker is located immediately on the side of a discharge conveyor. The container maker can be used simultaneously

By Staff Saudi Minister of Energy and Mineral Resources Ali al-Naimi has warned that countries seeking to engage in crude oil and gas fields which are under its jurisdiction can face major diplomatic backlash. In an interview with the American Broadcasting Company's 60 Minutes program, Naimi said the Kingdom is "committed to peaceful co-existence" and will "respond with force" to any violations of its sovereignty, according to the Saudi Gazette. The newspaper quoted Naimi as saying Saudi Arabia will not hesitate to take "a major foreign policy and diplomatic initiative" if the kingdom's interests are attacked. "If there is an incursion... we will respond aggressively," Naimi said in the interview, adding that Riyadh would seek more international support in its anti-terrorism measures. The multi-billion dollar investment Saudi Arabia is ready to undertake in Libya will likely prove controversial if any of the militias operating in the war-torn country are linked with terrorist activities, according to Naimi. "I would want to assure you that the Kingdom is interested in Libya in a number of ways, including oil exploration," Naimi was quoted as saying. "In certain circumstances, where we find that the threats to our national security come from inside Libya, I think our response to that will be very strong and very immediate," Naimi added. Libya, the birthplace of Muammar Gaddafi, has been reduced to an insecure state following the civil war. However, Naimi said the Arab country would not become a base for training of militants or terrorists. "We will not tolerate any threat or security risk to our own nationals in Libya," Naimi was quoted as saying. Naimi is also Saudi Arabia's deputy prime minister and interior minister, and is considered as one of the most powerful men in the kingdom, with a total of 57 portfolios.
