semiconductor wafers. Conventionally, a wafer is arranged in a wafer boat, which is held by a wafer boat support in a rotary washing tank, and the wafer boat support is rotated while supplying a rinsing liquid to the wafer boat support and rotating the wafer boat support to cause the wafer boat support and the wafer boat to be rotated in order to conduct a wafer-washing operation. With this arrangement, however, the wafer washes on the bottom surface of the wafer boat at the first rotation of the wafer boat support and then is floated in the wafer boat before being washed again on the lower surface of the wafer boat at the next rotation of the wafer boat support. The wafers, therefore, are not satisfactorily rotated in the wafer boat, and the washing effect is degraded. This difficulty may be alleviated to some extent by conducting the washing operation while causing the wafer boat support to be shifted or moved in the rotation direction of the wafer boat support. In this case, however, the wafer boat support is shifted
