Alexis "Lex'exo" Tuck and Zach "Randy" Johnson are suspended due to violations of the fighting game community, per the CSL rules. The duo of pro, high level, have been hit with a lifetime ban due to violations of Community Warfare's "spamming" and "stalking" rules, according to information published by CSL CEO Jürgen "Celerity" Weinmann on the official CSL forum this evening. Weinmann revealed that the decision was not made due to accusations of match fixing, but rather after "unprecedented, persistent breaking of the rules" by the pair. "For anyone not familiar with their conduct, we believe that having them play together under the CSL banner would be an unacceptably high risk," Weinmann said. Weinmann explained that CSL's decision was made to create a fair playing field for all players in the Battlefield V pro community. "We know that some of our fans have felt personally betrayed by this conduct," he said. "As such, we cannot continue to subject our fans to the risk of being treated unfairly by people they have worked so hard to support as a professional player. "It's easy to criticize in isolation, but I'd ask that we appreciate that the rules have a purpose. The rules were written to give us some level of consistency in the field. They were designed to give teams the opportunity to do their best work. And from time to time, it has become apparent that teams are more interested in free agency and a cash grab than they are working together. "The CSL has always been a family. We're talking about people here, and people
