Are you a Canuck? Singer/songwriter Colin James on his Canuck experiences during his time in New York, and how he managed to increase his drawing notoriety thanks to his "unassuming" style All things can happen with the right amount of time and practice... How do you deal with people coming up to you and saying that you look like a Canuck? And what kind of experience was it, having your photo taken by 30 people on 23rd St, in New York City? I was doing one of my first New York shows, at The Stone Pony. I'd been back in Vancouver for about a year, and I was thinking about going back to New York to finish up my current album. I was told that there would be free drinks, and the crowd in the audience was mostly American. To say I wasn't surprised that there was a large number of people asking to take pictures with me, would be an understatement. Here we are in New York city, walking down 23rd St. I'm wearing a suit – in fact, I'm really quite clean cut and normal looking – so I think I did very well for "looking" Canuck. I don't remember anyone actually saying it, but I'm sure it was implied a few times, it was just a weird thing to say to me. The great thing about it was that it was just a weird thing to say to me. And because I wasn't a huge fan of being told that I looked like some Canuck, I just smiled, and pretty much ignored it. Another photographer, who I'd met at the party that night, happened to mention something to me about how he had done a lot of work with the Canuck Football Association. "Ah, the Canuck Football Association," I said, thinking that at least I could finally have a connection. "No, that's my only concern," he said, "I do everything else." So that night in New York was the first time that I had a photograph taken by a Canuck organization. The following day, I got a call and an email from the Canuck Football Association, and from their chief national photographer. They wanted to fly out to Vancouver for a photoshoot, and took me to a local sports store to get a few footballs to

The present invention relates to power tools and, more particularly, to a power tool which provides a bevel and square cut for woodworking and cutting plastic, composites, concrete and other materials. One of the most efficient and comfortable ways to cut wood, plastic, composites and other materials is with a power saw. Many power saws are designed to provide a bevel cut along one edge of the material being cut. However, after the initial bevel cut is made, it becomes necessary to square the second edge of the material to be cut, because the radius of the first bevel cut is usually too large to make a square cut between the bevel cut and the second edge. This problem has been recognized and many tools have been developed to enable a person to make a 90.degree. bevel cut and then square the edge. These tools include various versions of a rotating blade and many different techniques for rotating the blade to make a bevel cut. U.S. Pat. No. 4,452,514 discloses a multiple blade saw which makes a bevel cut along an edge of a piece of material and then makes a second bevel cut which produces a 90.degree. angle at the second edge. U.S. Pat. No. 4,391,453 describes a hand-held circular saw having an eccentric cam which enables a person to rotate a blade to make a bevel cut along an edge and then cut a 90.degree. bevel along the same edge. U.S. Pat. Nos. 4,387,692 and 4,534,221 disclose devices that hold an elongated rotary blade in a fixed position for making a bevel cut at an edge of a piece of material. U.S. Pat. No. 4,501,285 discloses a rotary saw which makes a bevel cut and a second bevel cut to produce a 90.degree. angle along an edge of the material being cut. U.S. Pat. No. 4,567,768 shows a circular saw having a cam which rotates a blade to make a bevel cut along an edge of a piece of material. U.S. Pat. Nos. 4,573,622 and 4,572,592 describe rotary blade power tools having a flexible blade which is driven by a screw which is rotatably mounted in a slot, and a slot is provided for different blade angles. U.S. Pat. No. 4,505
